Many scenes in Solo Leveling: Arise are panel-for-panel remakes of the original South Korean webtoon. That's great, because the original art and character designs were stylish, and Arise lives up to them all. Graphically, there's little difference between these characters and those you'd find in Genshin Impact or Honkai: Star Rail. They're not the most unique looks in ...

Imma be real with you. This isn't solo leveling 2: if you want to read this then divorce yourself from that notion and just think of this story as a stand alone, with a few call backs to the precious work. If you go into this thinking it's gonna be exactly as good or the same as the firstborn your just going to walk away disappointed.

It could be easy for a series as lengthy as this to skimp on those details, so it is appreciated that so much time
